34 Recommendations made in the GS 2010. 12 key recommendations are:

1. The Certificate In Project Management (CIPM) credential should become an essential credential in enterprises. In one of the Global companies, it was found that the Project Management Knowledge Quotient (PMKQ) of CIPM credential holders was almost 100% better as compared to those without this credential. This is one of the reasons that over 300 companies have employees who have acquired the CIPM credential. Companies are increasingly adopting the IPMA Level A, B, C (based on Competency assessment), IPMA Level D & CIPM which are knowledge based, as the certification schemes for their employees. This is a good beginning but we need to speed up to cover the entire community of business and industry for more effective project delivery.
2. China has 36 times more certified project professionals at 2nd highest level i.e. IPMA Level B. China has 300+ times more Certified Project Managers (CPM) than India at IPMA Level C. This achievement of China was possible due to both Industry and Government cooperation. India must catch up with these numbers quite rapidly.
3. AICTE should be approached to include PM courses as mandatory for both MBA courses and Engineering syllabus. Formal education in project management is essential to improve India's project delivery.
4. I2P2M initiative in starting an International Executive Diploma in Project Management (IEDPM / EDPM) is a good beginning. India Inc. should take full advantage of this initiative. This would improve our project management competency.
5. PMA should promote chapters in all State capitals as well as major industrial cities.
6. Corporations should provide free PMA membership to their project professionals by contributing to the membership fee.
7. PMA, a not for profit registered society must become a strong national association. PMA membership needs to be increased manifold. Worldwide developed economies like USA, Germany, UK, Finland, Netherlands, Italy and France have very strong National PM Associations. Companies should encourage their professionals to become a PMA member.8
8. Companies should evolve a complete career path for project professionals.
9. Indian companies should participate in the National Project Excellence Award.
10. PMA should institute a Best Project Manager Award in various categories of small, medium and large companies. This should be given in the annual Global Symposiums in India.
11. It will be helpful for organizations to use the Project Management Knowledge Scan (PMKS™) in conjunction with PMKQ™ to first identify the weak areas of their professionals in the knowledge domain of project management to effectively plan for the training needs.
12. PMA and CEPM should become the focal point for implementing ISO 21500, a new standard to be released in 2012 in managing projects. Seminars and workshops can be held in next 12 to 15 months all over India. PMA Chapters should become local change agents in assisting companies to be aware of this forthcoming standard in project management.
